PRESS RELEASE FOR ARMA-1:

REUTERS--May 1904--NAPLES: Queen E. Barbara Philip addressed the Italian Government-in-exile: "Even while the barbaric hordes of Magyars overrun the eternal city, I ask you to go throughout the world in quest of peace. Which nation is so blind that she cannot see the hollocost ahead? Which nation is so deaf that she cannot hear the sound of doom in the marching Magyar masses? Which nation is so dumbstruck that she cannot speak out against the atrocities committed against men and Mankind by these savages and which nation lacks the insight to see the "clear and present danger" that these beasts represent to both itself and the world? Let that nation who cannot see, cannot hear, cannot speak, and cannot understand side with these aboriginies. Implore, my ministers, all civilized nations who respect and honor mankind to side and unite with Italy against these destroyers. We, in Italy, have felt these reincarnations of the four horsemen and beg the other nations to make a concerted effort to end these marching hordes before civilization is destroyed and Mankind is returned to the torch and club. Its Barbarism will be measured in Millenia. God speed and may he bless you with success for his names sake as Man was created in His image."

MIKE CELESTRE, the German player, writes:

Dear sir, the government of N. von Rijn wishes to make it known that it believes there has been a foul committed against the German moves ((for Fall 1901)) and wishes that you would reconsider your d cision on our last moves. Furthermore, we are certain that the gamemaster was merely in error, and that as a reasonable judge ((?)) will find in our favor. Although I do not have a copy of the Diplomacy rules, I consider the point plain enough that it is uncontestable. An army or fleet can do one and only one thing at a time: either move, support, or convoy (in the case of a fleet). Now if a position is attacked, say Paris, then that army must then defend, and cannot support Picardy as it was ordered to do. The same, I understand, is true for a fleet. If, say, a fleet was ordered to convoy an army from Yorkshire to Holland, and that fleet was attacked, the convoy would fail and the fleet would be forced to defend against the fleet in Denmark, as was the case.

Since the North Sea convoy of Yorkshire to Holland could not take place, then the German move of Kiel to Holland must have been without opposition.

I trust that the gamemaster and my most honorable fellow sovereigns will see the logic in my argument and change the ruling on Germany's moves which were, again F Denmark-North Sea, A Kiel-Holland, and A Munich-Ruhr. The move F-Denmark-North Sea cancelled the English convoy, and therefore, the English army did not move Yorkshire to Holland. So, finally, the German move Kiel-Holland did take place.

Reply; Reply: Unfortunately, though it seems illogical that an attacked fleet should be permitted to carry out its convoy order, the rules permit it! The rules state that a convoy is not disrupted by an attack which does not dislodge one of the the convoying fleets. To our knowledge, all other gamemasters rule this way. However, since you feel a great injustice has been done, we will do this: if three other players (or more) in this game (which will make a majority) agree with you that this ruling is contrary to the rules, we will set it aside, and the game will return to Winter 1901, with Germany being allowed to build an additional unit. If you cannot get three others to agree with you, Mike, then the ruling will have to stand. OK? All players are requested to include their vote on this matter with their next moves.

PRESS RELEASES:

LONDON: Prime Minister Maddux was given a standing ovation by Parliament as he rose to recommend a declaration of war against the German aggressors. "The Kaiser will be severely punished for transgressing our fishing grounds in the North Sea. If necessary, he will be sent to bed without supper. We call on all the nations of the world to help us in our mission to rid Europe of that nasty Hun!!"

VIENNA: An ominous silence settled over the Austrian capital today. Local residents expressed their opinion of current political developments as a "_____, _____, _____." and the "_____; _____". These views were reflected in the local press.

OMNIBUS players are reminded that Spring 1914 moves are due on or before Thursday 15 December 1966 c/o J.J. Dygert.

Well, no sooner do we finish talking about how it is possible for a dislodged unit to legally support an attack on the province which the dislodging unit comes from, and we have just such a situation. This occurred in the Turkish moves in ARMA-2.

J.J. Dygert is a walking international incident waiting to be perpetrated.
